

1. Introduction

A description could be just a paragraph, or it could be longer, as needed to fully describe the thing. However, a descriptive essay has five paragraphs. It is written in a coherent way with a good thesis statement at the end of the introduction, three body paragraphs, and a conclusion.

2. Definition

A descriptive essay, as the name implies, is a form of essay that describes something. In this genre, students are assigned the task of describing objects, things, places, experiences, persons, and situations. The students use sensory information to enable readers to use their five senses of touch, taste, smell, hearing, and sight to understand the topic of the essay.

3. Structure of the Descriptive Essay

The main aim of a descriptive essay is not simply to describe a particular object, place, person or situation, but to make your reader see and feel the same you do. In other words, you should try to reproduce your thoughts on the paper. Obviously, you must write in accordance with the particular structure, which usually contains:

- Introduction. This part is supposed to explain why the author has chosen a specific object or person. Introduction comprises a strong thesis statement and must captivate reader's attention from the first lines.
- Body. Here, the author pays more detailed attention to the main points. As a rule, each point is considered and discussed in a separate section. Usually, the body consists of three paragraphs:
- The first paragraph tells the reader about the object itself, its characteristics and the most distinguishing features. It gives a full and vivid picture through the smallest details of observation.
- The second paragraph portrays surroundings. In this section, you are free to use as many stylistic devices as you want. Your reader must feel the atmosphere of the environment you describe.
- The last paragraph refers to senses and emotions. You describe everything you can feel, see, hear, touch, and smell. Your task is to make the picture alive.
- Conclusion. The last stage is the conclusion. It emphasizes the importance of your description. In this part, you sum up your emotions, attitudes, and impressions.

4. Conclusion

Descriptive essay writing is in fact an enjoyable experience where the writer mixes his capacities in expressing details and specifications of people, things, places, characters and experiences in one piece of writing that considers details much more important than generalities.
